

Learning outcome 5: Personal Leadership

Screenshots of my message of reaching for feedback from my 1st group project client:

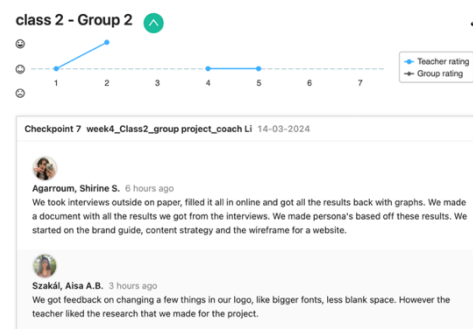

Dear Nathalie,
My name is Aisa Szakal from Fontys and since this is the last week working on the project of yours, I thought it would be great to contact you lastly before the presentation.
We finalized the style scape (with colours, fonts, style) and I would ask you if there is anything that you don't like about it.
We also have the two final logos that we changed a bit since the last talk with you, so maybe if you could choose one that would be great (I attached everything below).
Overall, I know we didn't speak with you that much, but it was nice to "meet" with you, see your work, and hear your story.
I hope you will like the final product.
Kind regards,
Aisa Szakal (and team2).

Sometimes asking for feedback, can be a very positive thing, especially, when the client highlight a few things that I made. Above you can see for example that our feedback was relatively positive.

You can see I ask feedback from teachers regularly.

My group is also very eager to ask feedbacks.
